

Q. I think you set a bit of a record today by challenging the very first point of the match? You won. Is that a sense of right from the word go, your focus was so good today?

ANDY MURRAY: Yeah, It was close, but you kind of get a feeling. I think a lot of guys, when they are really sure on one of them, they are going to challenge. I knew it was the first point. I wasn't going to waste one, because I saw it wide and I feel like I have pretty good eyes and my challenging is pretty good.

But there are times when players do lose the challenges a lot when they are just looking to see at the end of serves because there's no point in just saving them up. I've seen a few times in the last few weeks that the mark has showed out and Hawkeye has called it in. It's worth the chance maybe, trying to get the Hawkeye to make a wrong call or something. It happens sometimes.

Q. Do you think the Hawkeye is wrong sometimes?

ANDY MURRAY: It is wrong. It's happened twice where the mark has showed that the ball landed out and Hawkeye says that it's in. It has made mistakes, so I think the best thing to do to see if it's correct all the time is to use it on a clay court where there's ball marks.

Q. Is it possible, part of the ball hit the line and it didn't leave a mark, and that is what Hawkeye is recording?

ANDY MURRAY: No, because the line's here and the mark is like this (indicating). It's saying that it's like this far out, but then Hawkeye says it is in when it's clearly not. It's got to be the machine that's wrong because every ball leaves a mark, and a ball just doesn't miss with half of its mark out.

Q. Do you see that as a problem?

ANDY MURRAY: Not really, it's pretty accurate most of the time. It's only happened twice and it's been going maybe nine months. It is making less mistakes than the umpires do, so it's definitely not a problem.

Q. Do you think that your umpire should be able to overrule the Hawkeye

ANDY MURRAY: Yeah, it's no question. It's stupid not to be able to.

Q. The first time you went on court, it was new, you didn't really know when you were going to challenge? Some players now are stopping in the middle of points when they see a ball out, whereas in the past, they weren't comfortable to stop the point if they thought it was out. They would continue to play.

ANDY MURRAY: For some people it takes a bit of time. But a lot of guys who, when they do feel a ball was good or it was out, when there wasn't Hawkeye, it got called the other way, then they would ask the umpire what they thought. So now, instead of asking the umpire, they ask to challenge.

So it's not really made a big difference. And I think it's just a nice thing to have because we still play a lot of tournaments that don't have it. But it doesn't really make that much difference

Q. If the chair umpire can overrule Hawkeye, why have Hawkeye there?

ANDY MURRAY: I'm only saying he can overrule it when the mark is out and Hawkeye calls the ball in, then he can overrule. Chair umpires shouldn't be able to overrule if Hawkeye says that it's in and the mark is in. And if the Hawkeye calls it out and the mark is out, they shouldn't be able to overrule it, but if the mark is out and Hawkeye calls it in, then of course he should be able to overrule it.
